June 17, 2011

Anthem has appointed Harlan Levine, M.D., as executive vice president of Comprehensive Health Solutions. In this role, Dr. Levine will lead thousands of dedicated nurses, physicians and clinicians in achieving our objective to improve the quality of health care while making it more affordable.

Levine comes to Anthem from Towers Watson, a leading global professional services company, where he served as a national practice leader for the firm's health management business. During his tenure at Towers Watson, he re-focused the intellectual assets of the practice to align with the needs of a post-health care reform market, and guided the development of the firm's strategies for price transparency initiatives, provider contracting and supporting hospital clients to pursue Accountable Care Organizations.

Prior to Towers Watson, Levine worked for several national health care organizations in a variety of leadership roles, including as chief medical officer of UnitedHealth Group's Optum Care Solutions. He also was a regional medical director at PacifiCare Health Systems and an executive at Adesso Healthcare Technology Services and Salick Health Care. His extensive health management expertise includes medical management, disease management, wellness and health promotion, and change management. He received his undergraduate degree from Harvard College and earned his M.D. from the University of California-San Francisco School of Medicine.

"Harlan brings an invaluable combination of business and clinical experience to Anthem, making him uniquely suited to help lead our company into the future," said Braly. "As a physician who began his career practicing internal medicine, he has first-hand experience with patients and their doctors which enables him to understand their needs."
